At the time of this blog's publishing, the 2016 Olympic Games will have commenced in Rio de Janeiro, Brazil, and will end on Sunday, August 21st. Brazil, now the 5th largest country in the world must be ready to host the crowds, the athletes, and the spectators from its country and all over the world for this year's summer Olympics (Olympics, "Rio 2016"; Geohive). Despite the country's initial excitement about hosting the Olympics, it's a big job, and one that requires vast resource expenditures, security measures, and personnel to provide everything the athletes and fans need to enjoy their time at the Olympic Games. Brazil has infections are rampant in Brazil, and over $5 billion has been invested to improve sanitation for 15 million people, but some say it is only a quick fix ahead of the Olympic Games, and that the amount invested is nowhere near what it needs to be to sustain the health and cleanliness of the world's fifth largest country (Pinheiro Machado).

Brazil's Water and Sanitation

See where Brazil's water and sanitation falls - by the numbers.

82.8:	Percent of the Brazilian population with access to improved sanitation facilities. (102nd worldwide.)
20 Million:	The number of Brazilians with no access to safe drinking water or sanitation facilities.
28%:	Amount of the rural Brazilian population connected to a drinking water supply.
22:	Percentage of rural Brazilians connected to a safe drinking water supply.

The 2016 Olympic Games and Brazilian Political Instability

Just as Guatemala's president was forced to resign last year due to fraud and corruption charges, Brazil's president, Dilma Rousseff was suspended from the office. She is currently being investigated for charges that she "illegally manipulated government accounts" (BBC). Rousseff denies the charges, but will remain in suspension during the impeachment trial while Michel Temer (Brazil's vice-president) serves in the interim (BBC). This term is Rousseff's second in Brazil, and she was re-
